This is the official soundtrack for the Sword Art Online season 2 release and is available in both Direct and indirect regulation of the endogenous NMDA receptor channel by glycine sites. (R)-3-(4-Fluorophenyl)-1-(4-fluorophenyl)Ureas (FPUFURAs) are metabotropic receptor agonists which are potent and selective modulators of ionotropic N-methyl-D-aspartate (NMDA) receptor channels. The NMDA/glycine receptor complex plays a pivotal role in excitatory neurotransmission. It is thought that the binding of glycine to the NMDA receptor serves to activate the channel complex, rendering it more permeable for Ca^{2+} and Na^{+} ions. We tested the effects of the FPUFURA potentiator (S)-4,4-diphenyl-3-butyl-4-(pyridin-2-yl)piperidine-1-carboxylate (DPCPX) on NMDA receptor-mediated responses, using both whole-cell voltage-clamp recordings of cultured cerebellar granule cells and guinea-pig hippocampal slices. DPCPX selectively potentiated responses to NMDA ($\text{EC}_{50} < 1 \text{ microM}$) and non-NMDA agonists, and was ineffective at the alpha-amino-3-hydroxy-5-methyl-4-isoxazolepropionic acid (AMPA) and kainate receptors. DPCPX potentiation of the NMDA response was dependent on the presence of glycine ($\text{IC}_{50} < 10 \text{ microM}$) and was abolished by co-applying the specific glycine-B-receptor antagonist 2-hydroxysaclofen (200 microM). DPCPX-potentiated NMDA-evoked currents displayed lower threshold currents, faster kinetics and higher open probability compared with controls. Bath application of DPCPX (10 microM) or co-application of DPCPX (10 microM) and glycine (100 microM) reduced, but did not eliminate, the current evoked by exogenous application of NMDA to PC12 cells. Taken together, these results support the hypothesis that the
